Why LIGHTYEAR Left Me Confused - IGTTYMOEIYDCAT

Pixar's Lightyear was released on June 17 and I saw it on Sunday. It is rated PG and is 105 minutes. My feelings on this movie are complicated. I was fully into the movie for the first while, but it slowly dawned on me that there was nothing more to the movie than its simple premise: a movie about the guy from those other movies. Its intriguing opening crawl states that it was Andy's favorite movie when he got the toy of his favorite character, starting the toy story that was released in 1995. However, this idea isn't fully developed and left me with more questions than I had at the start, for example: "If this movie was supposed to have come out in the 90s, why does it have modern story structure and CGI?", "If the movie is called Lightyear, why does it say space ranger on the box in the original movie?", "If there are so many side characters, why do we only see toys of Buzz?" The story has a few cool ideas, but it is formulaic and predictable. Every message is shoved in your face, and not to mention the side characters are incompetent and annoying and they REALLY took me out of the movie. The twist was a cool idea on paper, but it didn't really work in the movie. There was a good movie in there somewhere, but it wasn't the one they made. On the whole, I would give Lightyear 6/10 spaceships. It's still in theaters, but if you miss it there, there really isn't much of a reason to see it when it comes to Disney+. Lightyear is very close to being bad, but there is enough good in it to make it a hit. Remember to leave your movie suggestions in the orange folder outside the OTT room if you want me to talk about a movie.

Similarities between Maya and Cyrenity

By the end of this article, you should have a clear understanding that the counselors Maya and Cyrenity are very different. Only one of the many "What's your favorite..." questions prompted a response that was unanimous. The responses to the final two questions were comparable but not identical.

Both of them had received the question, "What is a random fear of yours?" Although there were infinite possibilities, after some time to consider, they each had an answer they were confident with.

"Really big waves!" Maya had said with a smile on her face, knowing that fear isn't the typical one. Of all the questions Cyrenity could have agreed to (favorite color, animal, meal, sport, hobby, and food), she agreed with this one. They both had an immense fear of "really big waves."

Luckily, they had similar answers when it came to music. Maya said that Hadestown was her favorite musical, which lead to Cyrenity exclaiming that Hadestown was definitely in her running. In the follow-up question, "What is your favorite song from that musical?" Maya definitely stated "Why We Build the Wall," and Cyrenity, again, said that song was one of the ones she was considering.

Counselors Maya and Cyrenity had received over ten questions, and only one had matched up perfectly. This begs the question that no one knows the answer to... How do they work so well together if they are so different?
